Delhi Airport headed towards becoming an international cargo hub

Delhi Airport serves as a transshipment centre for export cargo from Bangladesh to other nations. This Sunday, the first shipment of transshipment cargo is scheduled to depart for Spain.

The freight transshipment via Delhi will be substantially less expensive for suppliers and manufacturers than alternative routes, according to the airport's operator, DIAL.

On February 7, DIAL received the government's approval for the airport to serve as a cargo transshipment hub between Bangladesh and other global destinations for export cargo.

The first batch of cargo, which left Dhaka on February 26 arrived at Delhi airport on Friday and will leave for its destined location in Spain on March 5, DIAL said in a release.

The transshipment cargo will reach from Dhaka to Delhi, via the Bangladesh-India border at Benapole-Petrapol.

"Once the cargo leaves the Petrapol border after all security checks, the manufacturers will be able to track their shipment throughout its journey, including its arrival at the Delhi airport, during security clearances, and final uploading of cargo on the aircraft," the release said.

DIAL, a subsidiary of GMR Airports Infrastructure Ltd, has created a special truck docking facility and a dedicated X-ray area for the swift transfer of cargo to their outbound locations.

The government's decision is expected to boost the national economy while reducing the shipment cost significantly for manufacturers and increasing the daily export of international cargo via Delhi airport, including ready-made garments (RMG), handlooms, footwear, leather products, jute products, and pharmaceuticals.

DIAL CEO Videh Kumar Jaipuria said that with this initiative, Delhi Airport is on its way to becoming the international cargo hub of the world, serving as a transshipment centre between East and West.

Delhi airport is the largest cargo hub airport in the South Asia region, with two integrated cargo terminals having an annual cargo handling capacity of 1.8 million metric tonnes which is scalable to 2.3 million metric tonnes.

American Airlines Cargo Ships Record Number of 'Living Works of Art' Globally

American Airlines Cargo is moving record numbers of decorative koi carp, known as Nishikigoi, from Japan to destinations around the globe. These ancient and long-living ornamental fish are highly prized by collectors, where their curated environments often serve as an element of artistic design. The most beautiful of the specimens can grow to more than 100 cm in length and be valued at $2 million USD each.

The Nishikigoi is the national fish of Japan because of its beauty and elegance, and it is considered a sign of great wealth and a source of pride in many cultures. The fish therefore require special handling and care when traveling by air as they are transported from native Japan to aqua culturists who import koi for collectors. The most popular feature on the fish are markings of two or three colors including white, scarlet and ink black.

American Airlines Cargo has been transporting koi in increasing volumes for 20 years. Their popularity has grown as ornamental fishkeeping expands globally, particularly in Hong Kong, the US, China, Germany, the Netherlands and Indonesia, which accounts for some 60% of their export value. Approximately 55% of koi breeders are in Niigata Prefecture, 250km north of Tokyo, with most of American's export business of koi coming from this region.

In 2023, the American Airlines Cargo team in Japan transported koi in record volumes of more than 19,100kgs to LAX and 9,600kgs to DFW alone.

"These living works of art are beautiful creatures and require highly specialized knowledge and training in order to ship them. Our dedicated team under Keisuke Morita are true experts in their field," says Emma Oliver, Director Cargo Sales Europe, Africa & Middle East (EMEA) and Asia Pacific (APAC). "The transportation of the Nishikigoi must be on direct flights due to their sensitivity, with great precautions taken to tailor their travel accommodations to their oxygen needs. I am proud of our teams that are trained to handle these shipments with the utmost care and expertise."

Panama Canal Adds Back Daily Transit Slots

The Panama Canal Authority is taking further steps to ease some of the restrictions on transits imposed due to water restrictions. Starting later this month, they are increasing the available slots for daily transits by a further 12 percent after delaying planned reductions earlier in the year.

Two additional slots will be offered through the auction system for transit dates beginning March 18, and an additional slot will become available for transit dates beginning March 25 for the original locks. According to the authority, these measures will allow the majority of vessels that want to transit the Panama Canal to have a better chance of obtaining a reservation.

Since the start of the restrictions the authority has urged shippers to use the reservation system to elevate some of the longer waits for transit. Current data shows that the industry has adapted to the restrictions resulting in a dramatic drop in the waits as some vessels divert and others use the reservations.

CMA CGM, Evergreen COSCO, and OOCL Extend Alliance to 2032

Demonstrating their commitment to cooperation and putting to rest some of the ongoing speculation, the CEOs of four of the largest container carriers came together to announce they agreed to extend for at least five years their cooperation known as OCEAN Alliance. Launched in the spring of 2017, OCEAN Alliance reports it is the world's largest operational shipping network calling itself "the backbone of trade routes for international commerce." They highlight the advantages of coordinating schedules and sharing capacity to provide best-in-class service, fast transit times, competitive sailing frequencies, and extensive port coverage.

The CEOs of the CMA CGM Group, COSCO Shipping, Evergreen, and OOCL signed a MoU in Shanghai to extend the OCEAN Alliance operational cooperation for five additional years.
